Las Vegas, Oct 14, 2018 (Issuewire.com) - Pete Willcox America's Elvis documentary "Elvis and Me" wrapped late Saturday, October 13th at the Royal Resort in Las Vegas NV. Pete Willcox is not only a singer he also is a word class impressionist. In the middle of the live show and the filming of the documentary Pete stops the show and in his best Christopher Walken voice says, "Gary would tell me to do my Christopher Walken impression, and I probably shouldn't because this is the Elvis and Me Documentary but since Gary's here tonight I'm going to do it anyway, Say Hi Gary".

Pete reverts back to himself and says "Everybody says hi to my friend Gary, Gary and I are working on his movie Green Acres Revisited. I love Gary he tells me you're in the movie and I know I'm in, no attorneys no BS, I'm in because Gary say's I am."

Then he says in the movie "I'm going to play Jesse Garon, I'm going to live next door on Pumpkin Acres. I have a new song I wrote while I was living in my RV traveling doing my show and the song is called living in a tin can. So, in the movie Jesse Garon is going to live in his RV with his five-girl band of Couse they are called the pumpkins it's going to be great". Finally, he says "Gary Bausch everybody ", and then resumes the live show.

So, the documentary will premiere on TV in the six months or so giving our project a great plug. There also may be an opportunity to document the making of Green Acres from the raising of the monies, the nationwide look alike actor casting call and the eventual shopping on the trailer-pilot the major studio houses in Hollywood.
