

Strategic Artist Plans for Growing Into And Out of Economic Crisis

Kansas City, Oct 26, 2018 (Issuewire.com) - A strategic artist is planning to grow into and out of an economic crisis. As he states everyone should find a way to gain traction away from the economy. Is that even possible?

The global paradigm shift in our awareness of economics can actually push nations toward more fiscal responsibility and sustainable growth. However, I would not suggest waiting for your elected officials to fix the economy before you take precautions. How to protect yourself from economic collapse should be your top priority.

Owing to what the world is going through, there is a call for everyone in the workforce. This call is for us to vividly reflect on where we are heading, what we are doing, and what kind of future are we making.

What recession and inflation are, are common topics of conversation. Looking intently at these problems, although there are several identifiable causes of the economic recession, the bottom line is actually out rotten values. We don't have a proper sense of direction in life. Hence, we have an economic financial crisis. We thus ask how we grow into and out of an economic financial crisis. This question leads us to answer the call. To answer the call is to find out how to answer the three basic "WH" questions previously given.

What are we doing?

We all are familiar with the saying that "Life is what we make it". We tend to blame our leaders for our misfortunes but in general, we actually contribute to our economy and to our entire society. Yes, everybody claims to be affected by the unfavourable effect of the recession and we are all afraid of the worse that would be accompanied with it, but what do we do with our self, our family, and our work? Our approach towards making a better life is a sole determinant of what comes off it.

Where are we going?

It is a verity that we are not sure where will go. We have heard of people who apply for unemployment and those who file for unemployment online. But in the organization where we are involved, if we have shown much commitment and dedication to our work, there is 90% probability that we will be retained. We will not be included in the list of those who are to be retrenched.

What kind of future are we making?

When the worse possible happens, then depression will not just be a simple one. It will become a great depression. We worry what is life during the great depression and how to survive the great depression. We are afraid that we might be facing a bleak future. This is absolutely true, "what we do today determine the kind of future that we will have."

Aside from us being able to answer the given questions, to come out of the economic financial crisis, we have to make a crisis management plan. While it is true that not all plans are being carried out, plans guide us to reach our goals and objectives.

In making the plan, there are three elements that we must consider. These are the threat to the organization, element of surprise, and short decision time. Each of these elements must be analyzed carefully. To make the plan a successful one, important characteristics must be manifested. These characteristics include readiness or open-mindedness to face challenges, positive outlook, hard work, and determination. With all these characteristics, the economic financial crisis could easily be solved.

These three principles of a crisis management plan if applied will lead us to expect brighter tomorrow while facing the economic financial crisis today. Remember that if we put this in mind, we will receive what we want to achieve. And recession or not we will be at our best anticipating each battle that life would give us.
