Without a working transmission, the vehicle won't move. However, many transmissions are neglected until they break down. Rebuilding or replacing a transmission is among the most expensive auto repair services. There are various factors that influence the cost of transmission repairs such as the extent of damage and model or age of the car. It's more expensive and harder to find parts for rare or older vehicles. Newer and well-maintained cars are cheaper to repair. Domestic cars usually cost less to fix than imported or high-end vehicles. Standard transmissions are also cheaper to replace or repair than automatic ones. It's important to know the early signs of transmission problems. Early intervention can mean cheaper repairs.

Delaying maintenance or ignoring the problem can lead to more expensive repairs or mechanical failure. The engine will shut down entirely and the only way to fix it is to rebuild or replace the transmission. It is essential to get the car inspected at the first sign of a problem. Some of these signs include hearing humming, clunking or grinding sounds from the engine, dark transmission fluid that smells burnt, lags or delays between gear changes, transmission slipping between gears while driving or popping back into neutral, higher than normal RPMs for gear or speed change, taking more than one second to engage in reverse gear, clutch dragging or hearing grinding or thumping sounds during gear changes.

If the transmission malfunctions or fails completely, it should be replaced or rebuilt. Sometimes, small repairs can be done if the problem is not that big. Rebuilding transmissions is a tedious and lengthy process. Twin Transmissions accepts all kinds of auto repair. They first check the transmission to determine the main cause of the problem and recommend the best course of action. The transmission fluid may need to be changed. The vehicle's computer system will be checked as well. Every transmission rebuild is backed by a 1 to 3-year /Unlimited Mile Warranty, which is the longest transmission rebuild warranty in Charlotte.
