Vallejo, Dec 31, 1969 (IssueWire.com) - Garrett Miranda is one of the very few highly talented music artists who conjure up an incredibly different range of sounds to highly impress his fans. Dark, heavy, and discordant all added up at perfect proportion to make an enjoyable romp through instrumental prog-metal fields. The Vallejo based metalcore artist has paved his way to success by exploring the most hard-hitting music pieces and leads them with heavily banging guitar and drum work. His music is a hybrid of various astonishing sounds that forms up the best metal core anyone has heard in the recent time.

When the artists recently dropped the anthem-like song ‘Spiritual Death’ starts off, the listener instantly figures out his hidden potential. Everything in the sound is well constructed, from the backbeats of the drums, the well-played guitar parts to the impactful melody line, it’s almost impossible to skip a beat. Garrett Miranda dominates the entire musical landscape with his extreme musical artistry that changes in structure and style at every corner. His effective balance throughout the song is truly gorgeous and emerges with the weight and heart of a full band.

In spite of having such immersive talent, the artist remained homeless for about two years and it was only music that helped him to recover from that dark phase. He aims to deliver his life lessons through his heart-throbbing soundtracks and superbly does that to achieve success. There’s a certain rising intensity in his powerful compositions that makes sure the artist collects the deserved acknowledgment for his skillful musical work. Garrett Miranda necessarily draws his inspiration from Parkway drive, darkest hour, and I lay dying to succeed in his music goal and straightforwardly follow
