Liverpool, Jan 16, 2020 (IssueWire.com) - Rundum Meir design and manufacture bespoke ventilated garage doors which provide natural ventilation and daylighting into enclosed garage spaces.

The garage doors feature vertical timber board-on-batten cladding for stunning aesthetics and means they can integrate into existing architecture.

Garage doors feature in award-winning residential development

The ventilated garage doors were designed and installed at the award-winning Adobe development in Cambridgeshire, by Countryside Properties. The architect – Proctor and Matthews, sought to deliver uniformity across different housing styles using a limited palette of materials.

Key to this was the use of vertical and horizontal cladding used throughout. It was also used in the doors for the carports in matching oak. And by choosing a ventilated door design, fresh air and daylight are allowed to flow through the carports from the rear gardens, adding an interesting visual dimension.

Bespoke ventilated garage doors

Each Rundum Meir garage door is handcrafted-to-order, which ensures any design, material selection, style or size can be precision engineered to perfectly fit the intended space. This allows the specification of garage doors to assist with natural ventilation in the garage or as a vent for a building's air conditioning system.

Vertical cladding is a popular feature in architectural designs, as it provides clean sight lines and clinical designs. It can be incorporated into any of Rundum Meir's garage doors – including side sliding, side-opening sectional and overhead sectional garage doors.

The company design and manufacturing capabilities are almost unlimited, which means the garage door can easily be designed as a stand-out architectural feature or blend sympathetically within a building's exterior.
