Holbrooks, Dec 31, 1969 (Issuewire.com) - Hailing from Coventry, the United Kingdom, Pest is endowed with the undeniable charms of British hip hop culture. He slowly turns himself into a bona fide rapper who finds his own rhythms and flexibility in every genre he picks. The new rap song 'Waiting' showcases the strong shifting of the British rapper from authentic hip hop to the slightly upbeat R&B music by collaborating with another sweet rapper/singer Shawty. It is available on Spotify and the number of streaming is increasing marvelously every day.

Pest is inspired to make music about the true stories and events that changed his life, molding his compositions sometimes into a biography or a confession. He started his journey by winning the street rap battles popular in the city and became unbeaten rap cipher at a young age with deep passion and one focus in his mind. With hardships and heartbreaks, he managed to make authentic hip hop and cross generic songs to explain his mental state.

'Waiting' is a bitter rap song with a sweet glide of soft tunes and heart-whelming lyricism that expresses his dilemma about the relationship. He raps in a warm tone about the intimacy and the broken parts of his heart. The track features the confusion, ambiguity of modern relationships that turn into ashes without acknowledging it. Shawty's powerful rap verses defended the story under a different light. 'Crown' is another single that starts with ominous piano riffs and ends with a mind-bending experience.
