The Boobie Trap is an American reality television series that started with a phone call from Hempel who previously owned a production company to Michelle, owner of DiBernardo Productions LLC. The concept grew and grew. They were both so intrigued by the behind-the-scenes of this beautification world they decided they had to run with it.

Coming up with the perfect name, The Boobie Trap, was inspired by Robin's Mother. She has a giant sense of humor!

Michelle and Robin met in Syracuse, NY at Syracuse International Film Festival in 2017. While the two are no strangers to working together as they did a magazine shoot in 2019, the two are very passionate about bringing awareness of the Good and the Bad of cosmetic surgery along with anti-aging beauty tips while bringing the most globally sought-after cosmetic surgeons. Hempel actually realized she was struggling with health issues now referred to as Breast Implant Illness from her silicone implants. Like many women including Celebrities such as Crystal Hefner, widow of Hugh Hefner, Robin decided to explant which saved her life. If you want to hear more about Robin's story you will have to tune into The Boobie Trap TV show.

According to Wikipedia, in 1949, 15,000 Americans underwent cosmetic surgery procedures. By 1969, this number rose to almost half a million people. While in 2019, 18.1 million cosmetic procedures were performed, states the Plastic Surgery Statistic Report.

Currently, these 2 inspiring women are looking to feature the Top surgeons across the country, Anti-Aging Beauty products, as well as your Plastic Surgery stories GOOD or BAD.
