Georgia, Atlanta, Jul 28, 2021 (IssueWire.com) - Technology can have huge benefits for the HR function. From streamlining processes and boosting engagement to improving employee development with access to content via different platforms anytime and anywhere; the opportunities are vast.

In her new book, Stacey Harris, Chief Research Officer at Sapient Insights Group, introduces us to the expansive world of HR Technology. With so many technologies to choose from, it is difficult for HR professionals to know which technologies are best suited to their needs, as well as which ones are worth the investment. This comprehensive guide is written in clear, concise language to address these specific issues. Covering all the core areas of HR including recruitment, performance management, learning and development (L&D) and rewards, it also provides additional commentary on how HR will be impacted by artificial intelligence (AI), machine learning, and the Internet of Things (IoT) going forward.

On a broader scale, Stacey says that her new book is “...specifically for the people trying to figure out how organizational goals connect with human goals, and how technology can be responsibly harnessed to reach a better future.”

“Finally, a book for leaders that can actually make your work life better. Stacey does an exceptional job capturing the intimate details of the ever-changing state of work, human resources, and HR technology. She breaks down complexities and outdated thinking, challenges people to think about human resources and technology differently and tackles the intersection of work and life...” says Lisa Sterling, Chief Administrative and HR Officer, Evercommerce.
