Most web designers know a few tricks to achieve this effect and most of them are much easier to learn and apply than you may be thinking at the moment.

It is almost certain that at some time we have faced designing a web page. Our profession may not have anything to do with graphic design, but the inconvenience of facing a blank page with our own creation is, to say the least, inescapable for any of us who get involved on the Net.

How do we make our page, or our site, be attractive, selling, quick to download, attractive, and more attractive? Well, basically, it's all about testing, testing, testing: Being wrong, being curious, and taking advantage of the network to see examples of good web design and trying to follow those examples is the best thing to do.
