Circle Translations define localization as, “adapting content to a specific culture or region.” This process can be arduous, as there is a dynamic difference between traditional translation and localization. The company further adds that “the process of localizing content involves modifying things like measurements and sayings, to make sure they strike the appropriate chord and meet the needs of the target market.” The company further argues that “translation and localization services can be used to maintain a personalized and conversational tone, or to mitigate words and phrases that could be potentially offensive to different cultures, regardless of the original intent.” This illustrates the importance of localization within business translation services. Circle Translations can help businesses localize a variety of speech interfaces, and address large demographics through their translation services.

The company also has a team dedicated solely to subtitle translation. This is particularly important within a global framework of digital consumption where video content is frequently the most consumed form of media. This service includes closed captioning, subtitling, subtitle translation and localization, and more. The company has garnered the trust of over 900 global companies, which utilize Circle Translations for a variety of subtitle translation services. Their transcription, subtitling, and closed caption services are human-generated, and this sets the company apart from other translation agencies. Circle Translations states that “Subtitles act as a cost-effective alternative to voice-overs for your localized and translated videos, and offer a quick way of providing localized or multilingual video content.” This highlights the unique opportunity that subtitling has for content generation and digital marketing. This is especially important for captions that are globally adopted. Beyond subtitling, the company also provides voiceover and dubbing services to their clients.
