Android TV boxes are a little less common in the UK than around the world, and many still prefer a smaller streaming stick over larger TV boxes. Smart TV boxes and Android TV boxes work in almost the same way. They connect to the back of a TV so people can say goodbye to watching all their favorite shows on a tiny tablet screen. Android TV boxes are streaming devices that allow viewers to watch streaming services such as Netflix, Amazon Prime, HBO Max, Hulu, and more on their television. Android TV boxes need to be connected to a TV via an HDMI port like the NOW TV Stick or Google Chromecast. But Android TV Boxes offer different functions and layouts compared to other similar devices.

The streaming services, on-demand services, and apps that viewers use may vary from brand to brand on Android TV. Viewers need to create accounts on many apps to watch for free. Sometimes they have to get subscriptions on some apps or streaming services to watch their favorite movies, matches, and other shows. Though Android TV Boxes are larger in size compared to Smart TV Sticks, their size corresponds to their power. Though choosing a smart TV Stick can be cheaper, Android TV Boxes offer a lot more power to the television. It not only offers a high-end viewing experience but provides a powerful gaming experience to the users as well.
