Since 1987... Delivering That Nostalgic Experience People Crave

In 1987 there were no smartphones and most people didn’t even know what a cell phone was. Paper maps were used to navigate trips. No thank you! Facebook, Instagram, and Amazon didn’t yet exist—no posting pictures of your best finds for your friends to see online. How did anyone survive? Technology has come a long way since 1987.

But what hasn’t changed is what makes the 127 Yard Sale such a memorable pastime. Getting up early with your friends or loved ones and hitting the road, not sure what hidden treasure you might find along the way. The interesting people you meet. The delicious food is cooked fresh at a local diner or old-time general store. Some things you can’t fully describe with words, but the happy feelings you are left with after experiencing the 127 Yard Sale will never be forgotten.

Rain Doesn't Stop 127 Yard Sale Shoppers and Vendors

The 127 Yard Sale always goes on rain or shine. Rain is very common in August, especially in the southern portions of the route in Tennessee, Georgia, and Alabama. However, rain clouds are typically scattered and showers are brief so if vendors are forced to close they will reopen as soon as possible. Keep in mind that forecasts often change drastically in just a day or two as well.

“Every year people ask me how rain will affect the 127 Yard Sale? I tell them, it won't! It's always going to rain somewhere on the expansive 690-mile route, but the vendors are prepared and ready to handle it. Worst case scenario you take a break and get a bite to eat and then get right back to shopping.”
