THE IMPORTANCE OF STD TESTING

STD's do not always have obvious symptoms. It's possible to be infected with an STD and not be aware. In fact, a large number of people with an STD will never have a single symptom.

Houston, Texas Aug 9, 2022 (IssueWire.com) - Houston-based Life Savers Emergency Room is making the process of testing for sexually transmitted diseases easy and confidential, to encourage more people to know their status, and get the necessary treatment they may require. Although it is common knowledge that sexually active adults need to get regularly tested for sexually transmitted diseases, the stigma and shame associated with STDs often make many people nervous about making inquiries into their sexual health.

The majority of adults today mostly only present themselves for testing when they are pressed with discomforting symptoms such as pain during urination, rashes, itching, or abnormal discharge from the genital area. And while the presence of any of those symptoms indicates the likelihood of there being an infection, many STDs and STIs can thrive quietly in a host and get passed around without presenting any symptoms.

According to statistics from the World Health Organisation, more than 1 million STIs are acquired from unprotected sex every day. In 2020, the number of new infections was estimated to be 374 million, with chlamydia accounting for 129 million new cases, gonorrhoea for 82 million, syphilis for 7.1 million, and trichomoniasis for 156 million new cases
