Hiking in Denali National Park is an unforgettable experience. You should also make sure that you have appropriate footwear because some trails may require special equipment such as crampons or snowshoes.

You'll need plenty of water, food, and warm clothing for your hikes; pack snacks that are easy to carry like granola bars or applesauce packets so you won't have to worry about packing too many supplies for your hike. For those interested in a more relaxing and peaceful flight experience, consider taking one of the many scenic tours. Denali National Park is home to some of the most iconic wildlife in North America, including brown bears, mountain goats, caribou, and moose. One of the best ways to spot these animals is by dog sledding; tourists can either rent their own sled or join a tour group for a morning or afternoon.

Either way, this activity provides an incredible opportunity to explore the park up close and personal. There are many other adventures one can experience in this great state, as well! Hiking on glaciers is a thrilling adventure that will lead you across crevasses, ice-falls, waterfalls, and more.

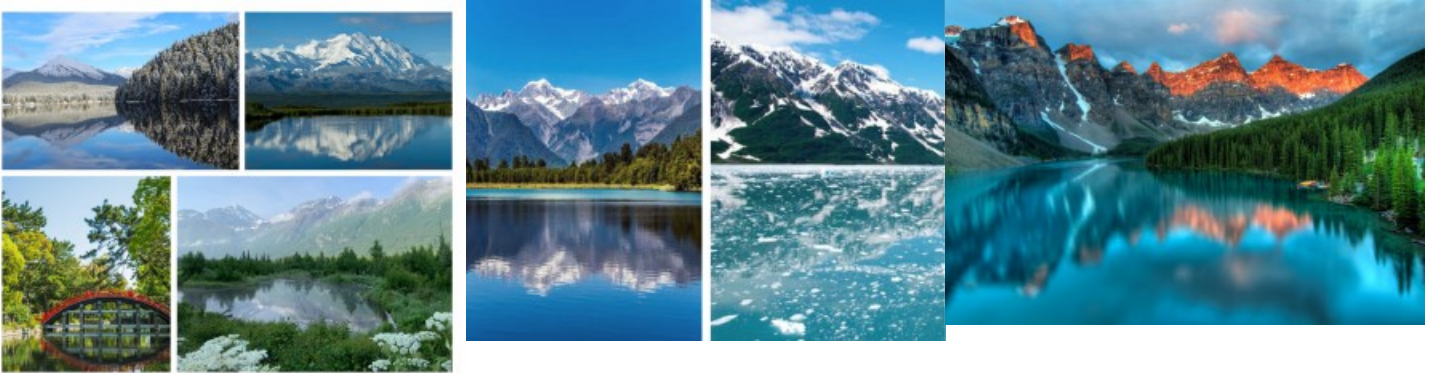

Katmai National Park & Preserve, on the remote Gulf of Alaska coast in southwestern Alaska, features some of the world's most active volcanoes and dramatic displays of native wildlife.
