The lead single from the album, also titled 'LPGC YOU KNOW', is a testament to Charlie's ability to express complex emotions through his music. The song was born from a chance to encounter friends, all of whom had simultaneously ended their romantic relationships. While they were living the Hollywood drama, Charlie remained calm and took the time to process his feelings in his own way. It was his friends who, over a night of pizza and wine, encouraged Charlie to open up about his heartbreak and embrace the process of healing.

Inspired by the music of Quevedo, Charlie channeled his emotions into a powerful ballad that speaks to the struggles of heartbreak and the strength it takes to overcome them. The song is an honest reflection of Charlie's experiences, and his fans are sure to connect with its raw emotion and powerful message.

Accompanying the single release is an acoustic video clip, which captures the intimate and personal nature of the song.
