

Same Edutech Institute - What is Non-attending or Dummy Admissions?

Non-attending or dummy admissions are a topic of much debate in the field of education. Some believe that these forms of enrollment provide more flexibility for students, On other side they can be detrimental to the overall academic experience.

New Delhi, Delhi Apr 7, 2023 (Issuewire.com) - Same Edutech Institute - Non-Attending/Dummy admissions are a form of enrollment where a student is accepted into a school without attending classes regularly. These admissions are no different from regular enrollments except in name. Not all schools offer this type of admission as they incur costs related to the school's name, infrastructure, location, and teachers.

The schools that accept non-attending/dummy admissions must maintain all records of the students, just as if they were attending classes regularly, as per the CBSE Guidelines requiring a minimum of 75% attendance from all students. The school can benefit from these students as they pay the full tuition fee without making use of the facilities provided.

At their core, non-attending or dummy admissions function similarly to traditional enrollments. Students apply and are accepted into a school based on various criteria such as academic achievement and extracurricular involvement. However, unlike regular enrollments where attendance is mandatory, these types of admissions allow students to attend classes on a more flexible schedule. For some students, non-attending/dummy admissions may offer benefits such as being able to balance work or family responsibilities with their studies.

Additionally, it may provide opportunities for individualized learning at one's own pace without being held back by a structured classroom environment. However, there are also potential drawbacks to non-attending/dummy admissions. For instance, students may miss out on key information presented during class discussions or face difficulties in keeping up with coursework due to infrequent attendance.

Furthermore, social interaction and networking opportunities may be limited when compared with traditional enrollments where regular attendance fosters connections among peers.

Benefits of Non-Attending OR Dummy Schooling

- If a student is preparing for entrance exams such as IIT JEE or NEET exams, then the candidate must go for dummy schooling.
- Students have ample time for their entrance exam preparation as these exams are tough, and students can appear only once a year.
- Time is very precious if someone prepares for entrance exams as these exams only decide your future.

Overall, while non-attending/dummy admissions do present pros and cons depending on individual circumstances and preferences; it's important for schools to carefully evaluate whether these forms of enrollment align with their educational goals before implementing them into their admission policies.
