

Eugene Record (The Chi-Lites) celebrated by estate's new release: "I Gotta Find A Way"

Eugene Record, writer of songs like "Oh Girl," "Have You Seen Her," and "Soulful Strut"

Chicago, Illinois Apr 13, 2023 (IssueWire.com) - Eugene Record, best known as the lead vocalist of legendary Chicago outfit The Chi-Lites, will be celebrated by his estate with the release of a previously unheard recording: "I Gotta Find A Way," performed by Recordplayers featuring Eugene Record. The unreleased work captures the essence of the artist's soulful musicianship while also embodying the timeless melodic style that made him the icon he is. This happens to be the first new music from Eugene Record in over 25 years, marking a very special moment for fans and supporters alike.

Following his successful stint as a lead vocalist with The Chi-Lites, Eugene moved on to a remarkable production career, which led him to work for generations of amazing artists. He is widely regarded as one of the seminal artists in the gospel, R&B, and Soul, and his impact is still very much alive in the music scene to this day, as shown in the ever-present interest in the audience and people's hunger for new unreleased music from him.

Eugene's music is still revered and highly respected to this day. His legacy continues to move audiences, as many of today's top artists sample some of his best records and melodies. From Jay-Z to Beyoncé, many have celebrated this pioneer. Do not miss out on "I Gotta Find A Way" and learn more about Eugene Record and The Recordplayers exclusively at www.eugenerecord.com.
