

Martin Wardley Shows Gratitude to Life by Singing ‘All These Things I Could Have Been’

Look back to life and cherish every moment with Martin Wardley, the music artist who has come up with a brand new track ‘All these things I Could have been’.

Kendal, Sep 22, 2023 (IssueWire.com) - Versatile music veteran Martin Wardley offers an introspection of life through his latest musical work. The song is titled ‘All these things I Could have been’ which is a reflection of life and regrets that take place on the path. Wardley does not only offer pieces of his journey but also offers several relatable moments that can captivate global listeners. Churning out the authentic essence of Americana and folk music; the song is beautifully made and sounds soothing to the heart.

Just like the title suggests, there is a sense of desire and regret in ‘All These Things I Could have been’. However, there is also a great essence of gratitude where Wardley wants the listeners to be happy with what they have in life. Considering life as a path, there are numerous crossroads where a human has to make some tough decisions, and based on the decisions; life takes shape. Being a songwriter, poet, and performer, Wardley knows exactly how to present his vision and philosophy through music.

Hailing from Kendal, Cumbria; Wardley is highly inspired by a variety of artists and different musical genres which makes his works even more unique. Artists like Woody Guthrie, Nick Cave, and Tom Waits, as well as music genres like punk, folk, country, electronica, 60's girl bands, etc., are his favorites. Martin Wardley is looking forward to dropping more amazing musical projects in the coming months as there is no stopping now.
