Indigenous People of Biafra (IPOB) Expresses Skepticism Over British Declassified Documents

In a notable response to recently declassified British documents concerning Russia and Israel's roles during the Biafra Genocidal War, the Indigenous People of Biafra (IPOB) has raised concerns about potential psychological operations. IPOB leaders assert that they are focused on the future and will not be swayed by attempts to influence their alliances.

The British government's decision to sponsor a documentary detailing Russia's alleged support for Nigeria during the conflict and Israel's dual role has drawn skepticism from IPOB. The group believes that the release of these declassified documents is part of a broader strategy to disrupt their current relationships with Russia and Israel. They emphasize that Biafrans should remain vigilant and not be misled by these historical documents.

IPOB's stance reflects their determination to determine their alliances independently. They underscore that the painful history of the Biafra Genocidal War, where millions of Biafrans perished and the region was devastated, is firmly etched in their memory. They hold Britain partially responsible for the tragic events and the collapse of negotiated agreements.

While acknowledging Britain's potential influence, IPOB calls for concrete actions, such as securing the release of their leader, <https://www.emmynet24.com/2023/10/british-governments-declassified.html>, and advocating for a referendum for Biafrans to decide their future. Until these conditions are met, they are unwilling to consider any messages regarding alliances.

IPOB leaders anticipate further attempts to influence their perceptions, including the creation of fake social media profiles using Igbo and Biafra names to provoke sentiments. However, they emphasize their discernment and commitment to deciding their friends independently.

As IPOB reacts to the declassified documents and alleged security leaks from the Nigerian government, they maintain their determination to prioritize the interests of Biafrans in their decision-making processes.
