Digital Intervention in the Irish Health Care System

The Irish healthcare system is exercising digital interventions to enhance care quality, reduce costs, and improve patient issues. Common digital interventions include telemedicine, e-prescribing, electronic health records (EHRs), patient portals, and mobile health apps. Telemedicine enables remote consultations, monitoring, and education, while e-prescribing reduces drug crimes and improves patient safety.

EHRs enhance communication between healthcare providers, track patient care, and reduce executive costs. Patient portals allow patients to access health information, schedule doctor's appointments, and communicate with healthcare providers. At the same time, mHealth apps offer healthcare services like tracking data, managing chronic conditions, and furnishing education and support.

The Irish government is investing in digital health enterprise, with the National Digital Transformation Strategy for Health 2022- 2025 aiming for wide relinquishment of EHRs, a public telehealth structure, mHealth creation, and a public data pool for health exploration. The Irish healthcare system is facing challenges due to adding demand and growing populations, and digital interventions can help address these challenges and ameliorate the quality of care for all cases.
