“
I've danced this dance before, and as a 38-year-old Black woman navigating the theatre of corporate America, I know that climbing to a director-level position is not without sacrifices. Each step up the ladder brought with it a box—a space you're expected to fold neatly into. They don't tell you that this box comes without air holes, that it is dark and cramped and suffocating. They don't tell you that in this box, your light doesn't shine—it diminishes.”
