Fastfrwr.info, a green social platform run on 300% renewable energy offsets, started up by the artist, Aleya Jobson, who will try to plant trees at the checkout for their next expansion. The platform is gamified and, following up on the artist's declaration in the outro for 'Some kind of Paradise' the album where the artist speaks with her cousin musing how she would like to create a video game world, the artist now has a videogame multiverse in the making where all worlds are facing climate catastrophes that players have to fix. The album is exclusively available through Fastfrwr.info but takes previously existing songs and previously released "Seeker" tracks interspersed with narrative.

Seekers of Utopia has 33 tracks, combining old songs from old releases, recorded in Germany and Jamaica.
