It's about uniting as one nation for our children, families, and future. Just like in the military, we as American citizens are one."

The inspiration behind the song stems from Taylor's personal experience. During the pandemic shutdown, his father was one of the first people in Nevada on a ventilator and sick for 10 months while having a 5 percent chance to live. By God's grace, Reverend Taylor pulled through. , Taylor wrote the lyrics to the song finding strength in the inspiration of its core message. He soon connected with GOP senior leadership and President-Elect Trump's administration, where he was welcomed due to his dedication to American patriotism, his military service, and his clear mission to emphasize unity amongst all Americans.

B. Taylor's dedication to bringing Americans together is a testament to his community outreach and born leadership both in and out of uniform. As a Navy veteran, he draws from his service experience, reflecting a vision for America that is built upon its strength, solidarity, and shared purpose—values that are at the core of his song "We Are One (God, Family, Country)."
