Danbury, Connecticut Dec 17, 2024 (IssueWire.com) - Hospitality industry leader Scott Yandrsevich is urging communities to recognize and support the often-overlooked efforts of hospitality workers during the holiday season. With decades of experience in the field, Yandrsevich understands the critical role these professionals play in creating memorable experiences, frequently at the expense of their own celebrations.

“The holidays are the busiest time for hospitality,” Yandrsevich explains. “While everyone else is celebrating, these professionals are working tirelessly to ensure others have a great experience. It’s important to acknowledge their sacrifices and support them however we can.”

The Pressure Behind the Scenes

The hospitality sector sees a dramatic surge in activity during the holidays. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, over 16 million Americans work in hospitality and leisure, with the demand peaking in November and December. A survey by the National Restaurant Association found that nearly 90% of restaurants experience increased traffic during the holiday season, and nearly 60% of hospitality workers report increased stress during this time.

From hotel staff managing full occupancy to restaurant teams serving holiday meals, these workers are essential to keeping the season running smoothly. Yet, they often work long hours, sacrificing time with their families to meet the demands of guests.

Actionable Support Initiatives

In addition to raising awareness, Yandrsevich is partnering with local organizations to provide tangible support. His initiatives include delivering holiday meals to staff working on Christmas Day and hosting workshops on stress management and self-care for industry professionals.

“Hospitality is about making people feel valued,” Yandrsevich says. “This season, we should extend that same courtesy to the people behind the scenes who make the magic happen.”

Yandrsevich also calls on guests to take simple actions that make a big difference. Leaving thoughtful reviews, tipping generously, being patient during peak times, and even expressing verbal gratitude can have a profound impact.

A Call to Action

“This industry thrives on human connection and kindness,” Yandrsevich concludes. “By supporting hospitality workers during the holidays, we’re not only showing gratitude but also ensuring the sustainability of an industry that touches so many lives.”
