

Eleny Romanos-Sirakis, MD, MS, FAAP: A Leader in Pediatric Hematology and Oncology at Staten Island University Hospital

Local Pediatric Specialist Enhances Care for Young Patients with Blood Disorders and Cancers

proudly announces the continued leadership of Eleny Romanos-Sirakis, MD, MS, FAAP, who serves as the Director of Pediatric Hematology and Oncology. With her board certification and extensive experience, Dr. Romanos is committed to providing exceptional care for children facing complex hematology and oncology challenges, ensuring that families on Staten Island have access to specialized medical expertise without the need to travel off the island.

Dr. Romanos brings a wealth of knowledge and experience to SIUH, having previously served at NYU Langone Medical Center in Manhattan, where she focused on pediatric cancers and blood disorders. Her dedication to her patients is evident in her comprehensive approach to care, which encompasses a wide range of conditions including anemia, various blood cell count disorders, bleeding and clotting issues, sickle cell disease, thalassemia, and several types of tumors and leukemias. With her specialized training, Dr. Romanos ensures that each child receives personalized attention tailored to their specific needs.

Understanding that the journey of a child with a serious medical condition can be overwhelming, Dr. Romanos emphasizes the importance of family involvement in the treatment process. “Every child is unique, and so are their medical needs,” she states. “I believe in working closely with families to create a care plan that addresses not just the medical aspects, but also the emotional and psychological well-being of the child and their family.” Families are encouraged to communicate their specific needs when scheduling appointments, allowing Dr. Romanos and her team to provide a truly personalized experience.

In addition to her clinical expertise, Dr. Romanos is deeply committed to improving the quality of life for her patients. She has undergone specialized training in pediatric pain management and has played a pivotal role in developing the SIUH Pediatric Comfort Campaign. This initiative aims to minimize pain for children undergoing medical procedures and enhance overall pain management strategies in pediatric care settings. “Pain management is a critical component of pediatric care,” Dr. Romanos explains. “Our goal is to ensure that children feel as comfortable and supported as possible during their treatment.”

Dr. Romanos is also dedicated to advancing pediatric research and education at SIUH. As the chair of the pediatric research and scholarship committee, she actively promotes innovative research initiatives that enhance patient care and improve treatment outcomes. Her involvement with professional organizations, including the American Society of Pediatric Hematology/Oncology and the American Academy of Pediatrics, further demonstrates her commitment to the field and her desire to stay at the forefront of pediatric medicine.

Recognized for her dedication and excellence in patient care, Dr. Romanos has received several accolades, including the Truly Mentorship Award and the President’s Award for Physician of the Year Finalist in 2024. Her professional journey began with her education at New York University School of Medicine, where she completed her residency and fellowship training.

As a proud native New Yorker, Dr. Romanos is passionate about providing high-quality, personalized care to the children of Staten Island. She and her team at SIUH are dedicated to ensuring that every child receives the specialized attention they deserve in a compassionate and supportive environment.
